

Dr. Yong-Cheng Shi receives Phil Williams Applied Research Award from AACC International

Dr. Yong-Cheng Shi, a professor in the Department of Grain Science and Industry, receives Phil Williams Applied Research Award from AACC (American Association of Cereal Chemists) International. Established in 2005 by AACCI, the Phil Williams Applied Research Award is presented for a significant body of distinguished contributions to the application of science in the cereals area. Dr. Shi delivered an award lecture on “Developing Starch Products for Nutritional, Food, and Industrial Applications” at the AACCI annual meeting in Savannah, GA, on October 24th, 2016. As a recipient of the Phil Williams Applied Research Award, Dr. Shi is also accorded the status of AACCI Fellow for his contributions leading to this award.